SOME CURIOUS AVERSIONS.

The Secretary of Francis I. used to stop up his nostrils with bread if he saw a dish of apples, to prevent an otherwise inevitable bleeding at the nose. A Polish king had an antipathy to both the smell and sight of this wholesome fruit, and a family of Aquitaine and Scotland was sadly troubled by an unaccountable aversion to the smell of bread. Cheese, mutton, mink and ambergris have been so repugnant to some royal organs as to send their owners into convulsions.

Gretry, the composer, could not endure the scent of the rose, neither could Anne of Austria. The mere sight of the queen of flowers was too much for Lady Heneage, bed chamber woman to Queen Bess; indeed, K. non Digby records that her cheek became blistered when some one laid a white rose upon it as she slept. Her ladyship's antipathy was almost as strong as that of the dame who fainted when her lover approached her wearing an artificial rose in his button hole. A violet was a thing of horror to the eyes of the Princess de Lamballe; tansy was abominable to an Earl of Barrymore. Scallier grew pale before the water cress, and a soldier who would have scorned from a spring of rue, on a foe, fled without shame from a sprig of rue.

A poor Neapolitan was always seized with a fit upon attempting to swallow a morsel of flesh meat of any kind, and nature thus condemned him to vegetarianism; a sorer infection than that suffered by Guineas, whose heart palpitated violently if he indulged in a pork dinner, or by the lady who could not taste udder of beef without her lips swelling to uncomfortable dimensions. Dr. Prout had a patient who declared honest mutton was as bad as poison to him. Thinking this was all fancy, the doctor administered the obnoxious meat under various disguises, but every experiment ended in a severe vomiting fit.

Another unlucky individual always had a fit of the gout a few hours after eating fish, and a Count d'Armstadt never failed to go off in a faint if he knowingly or unknowingly partook of any dish containing the slightest modicum of olive oil. A still worse penalty attached to lobster salad in the case of a lady, for if she ventured to taste it at a dancing party, her neck, before she returned to the ball room, would be covered with ugly blotches, and her peace of mind destroyed for that evening. According to Burton, a melancholy Duke of Muscovy fell instantly ill if he but looked upon a woman, and under similar provocation, Weinricher tells of a nobleman who drew the line at old ladies, which did not prevent him losing his life in consequence of his strange prejudice; for, being called from the supper table by some mischievous friends to speak to an old woman, he fell down directly he beheld her, and died then and there.

What an odd woman did for this old hater, an eclipse did for Charles d'Escaro, Bishop of Langres. It was his inconvenient custom all ways to faint at the commencement of a lunar eclipse, and remain insensible as long as it lasted. When he was very old and very infirm an eclipse took place. The good Bishop went off as usual; and never came to again. Old John Landley, who settled in Ireland in 1651, cherished an antipathy quite as obstinate, but had no idea of dying of it. By his last will and testament he ordered his corpse to be waked by fifty Irishmen, for each of whom two quarts of aqua-vitæ were to be provided, in the hope that, getting drunk, they would take to killing one another, and do something toward lessening the breed.—Chambers' Jour.

PARISIAN GOURMANDS.—The recent sale of the magnificent Hotel de la Regniere, in the Champs Elysees, has recalled to the minds of the Parisians the memory of the original owner and his eccentric son. The house was built by the architect Barre for Regniere, the financier, who lavished thousands on its decoration. The family were blessed or afflicted with a reputation throughout Paris as the leading gourmands of the age. The father of the capitalist died, according to the received report, with the napkin at his chin, and with a pate de foie gras before him on the table. Grimoed de la Regniere, the son, continued and improved the reputation of his father, and the grandson, bearing the same name, added to it by devoting a lifetime to the elaboration of entertainments as extraordinary as they were sumptuous. Some of the caprices of the host were by no means agreeable to the guests. Such was the prohibition of all wines during the repast, and the obligation imposed upon each diner of drawing his own cup of tea or coffee from some brassy figure of a satyr charged with these liquids. Another was the undertaking exacted from each of the persons invited to the "philosophic breakfasts" to consume at least seven cups of one of those drinks. In spite of these tyrannical restrictions and compulsory rules, the competition for admission to the bacquets was immense. Not only were the places of the guests themselves occupied, but a large gallery surrounding the dining room was crammed with spectators, to whom tickets of admission had been sent. Besides the host of absurdities introduced by the younger La Regniere was an innovation to which the present generation will allow some share of commendation—that of dispensing with the services of domestics, whose places were supplied by mechanical contrivances now more commonly known and applied.—Globe.

The English Board of Trade has just ordered to be published in the Colonial Statistical Abstract a statement of the population of the British possessions abroad, which may be condensed as follows:—British India, 190,663,023; Ceylon, Straits Settlements and Labuan, 2,718,273; British North America, 2,748,857; West Indies, with New Zealand, 1,978,748; the Australian, Honduras and British Guiana, 1,280,268; the Cape of Good Hope and Natal, 855,931; West African settlements—viz., Gold Coast, Sierra Leone, Gambia and Lagos, 530,654; Mauritius, 318,584; Hong Kong, 124,198; St. Helena, 6,241; Bermuda, 12,121; Falkland Islands, 81; Malta and Gibraltar, 141,918 and 16,454 respectively, exclusive of the military. The total is 202,405,699, and in North America and Australia there has been a substantial increase since the census was taken.
